Aims

By the end of this tutorial you will be able to:

- Explain what is meant by 'government information'.
- Understand different types of UK government information.
- Access online resources (free and subscription-based) to find UK government information.

What is government information?

Definition: Publications (including official statistics and data files) from the state and related public bodies, intended for public viewing. Examples of these public bodies include:

- Parliament and devolved parliaments & assemblies.
- Regional/local government.
- Non-ministerial departments e.g. HM Revenue & Customs.
- Executive agencies e.g. UK Border Agency.
- Non-departmental public bodies e.g. Arts Council of England.
- Parliamentary bodies e.g. Electoral Commission.

Parliamentary Papers

Definition: The term Parliamentary Papers refers to documents that are laid before Parliament. These include the working papers of Parliament, other papers produced by Parliament and its committees, or papers presented to Parliament by outside bodies.

Papers produced by Parliament and its committees:

Both Houses of Parliament (Commons and Lords) publish documents that result from their work and that of their committees, such as:

- Select committees reports and evidence.
- Register of Members' interests.
- Standing Orders – the rules for conducting business in both Houses.
- Sessional Returns – which includes statistics on the work of the Commons for each parliamentary year.

These papers are published as House of Commons or House of Lords Papers.

For more information, see: About Parliament - Parliamentary Papers.

Primary Parliamentary Publications

Green Papers

Green Papers are consultation documents produced by the government. They outline proposals for new policy and invite feedback from people inside and outside Parliament during the consultation period. For more information see: Green Papers.

White Papers

White Papers contain a more definitive view of Government policy than Green Papers. They offer an opportunity for further consultation before a Bill is finally presented to Parliament. For more information see: White Papers.

Bills

A Bill is a proposal for a new law, or a proposal to change an existing law, that is presented for debate before Parliament. Bills are introduced in either the House of Commons or House of Lords for examination, discussion and amendment, and proceed through several stages in both Houses before receiving Royal Assent and becoming an Act of Parliament. For more information, see: Bills.

Acts of Parliament

An Act of Parliament is a law, enforced in all areas of the UK where it is applicable. It includes amendments made during its passage through Parliament. For more information see: Acts of Parliament.

Secondary Parliamentary Publications (Statutory Instruments)

“Statutory Instruments are the most common form of secondary or delegated legislation, and are often the detailed regulations and orders needed to bring an Act of Parliament into force”. (Inman & Picton 2012, p. 72)

They are used to add detail to or amend existing legislation. For example, a Statutory Instrument could be used to state the date at which an act will come into force.

Command Papers

Command Papers are government publications which are used to convey information and decisions that the Government think should be brought to the attention of the House of Commons, and/or the House of Lords. The term refers to ‘By command of her Majesty’.

These can include many government publications such as State Papers, White Papers, Green Papers, reports of Royal Commissions & other Committees of Inquiry, statistics and annual reports of some government bodies.

Most, but not all, are published in a numbered series which have prefixes such as C, Cd, Cmd or Cmnd, depending on date.

Discovering Government Information

It is important to look at original material from authoritative and unbiased sources, and not an interpretation of it.

Remember that information from sources such as social media may well be representative of a particular viewpoint and may not be unbiased. As always, it's important to think critically and question the information you're using.

The databases Public Information Online and UK Parliamentary Papers provide access to a wide range of official information, much of which may be freely available from official websites but often not in an easily searchable format.
